Objektbeschreibung

The design of the project is inspired by the Wilhelminian-style urban environment of the quarter around Savignyplatz. At the same time, Wieland Pestalozzi continues the traditional residential culture around Kurfürstendamm.

The architecture of this townhouse with 33 residential units meets high standards, but at the same time is deliberately restrained. The result is a design that radiates timeless elegance both inside and out. As a result, the townhouse in the WIELAND/PESTALOZZI blends very harmoniously into the historically evolved city and house structure of the popular urban quarter.

The clearly structured façade with high-quality plaster but also brick surfaces gives the house a special character and is also sustainably manufactured through the use of mineral insulation material. This is continued through the diverse flat layouts and different sizes - with a view of the urban space and the private courtyard garden.

Location

The quarter around Berlin's Savignyplatz in the Charlottenburg district has traditionally been a location for Berlin's intellectuals, creatives and art patrons. It is the heart of City West and still largely preserved in its Gründerzeit structure.

With its location between the fashionable Kurfürstendamm and the science centre of Berlin's Technical University, the district is a popular residential quarter for Berlin's middle classes.
